

Works Excluded from the Restrictions above:

Unprotected works (laws, decrees, government reports, etc.)

Works belonging to the public domain (A book enters the public domain 70 years after the death of its author or last-surviving co-author. A periodical enters the public domain 70 years after its date of publication.)

Protected works which may be copied for free:

- o Free newspapers, catalogs, brochures, etc.
- o Tables of contents, bibliographical references; summaries of books and short biographies appearing on the cover

Some webpages (linking to webpages is always allowed).

Pages written entirely by you for a class, such as title pages, original exercises and study guides, etc.

Librarians, although not legal experts in the field, have received some training on French intellectual property and have some experience. They can help you understand some of the local laws.

The complete official CFC guidelines may be obtained from their website:

<https://www.cfcopies.com/secteurs/pedagogiques>¹

For list of materials see also: <https://v1.cfcopies.com/Oeuvres-soumises-a-redev-ou-gratuites.pdf>

Films and intellectual property:

The Library makes all possible efforts to get the films required by members of the community, especially when they are for teaching purposes.

The Library tries to obtain the films with the most possible viewing rights, to make the viewing easy for you and to respect the local intellectual property law. The local film providers for libraries may provide the films with public viewin

*General Services and Academic Affairs are working currently on a centralized system.

Once all final, signed and approved,

*General Services and Academic Affairs are working currently on a centralized system.